Bio

My most fulfilling career and mission is that of husband and father for over 15 years. During that time I have also served in the United States Marine Corps as a combat helicopter mechanic and aircrew machine gunner. The majority of my six years in the Corps were spent living in Okinawa, Japan where I deployed to Australia, Guam, S. Korea, and East Timor, just to name a few. In 2005 I left the Corps and returned to my hometown of Cincinnati, OH where I attended the University of Cincinnati full-time while working as a corrections officer.

At the completion of my undergraduate degree, in 2009, my family packed up, rented out our home, and moved to San Antonio. While searching for a teaching job I drove bus 206 for North East ISD. One year later I began teaching at Jose Lopez Middle School where I remained until 2013. I also taught Greco-Roman language, culture, and mythology at a girl's reformatory in the summer.

Late in 2013 I took over as the Chief Academic Officer for a charter school in Katy, TX where I remained until being hired on as the Assistant Director of Transportation, HR at Cypress-Fairbanks ISD. I'm currently the Falcon Center Area Director responsible for roughly 200 vehicles transporting about 20,000 children each day.

I'm surrounded by a dynamic group of individuals working in concert to move what amounts to a small town every day. Without them more than 50% of our school children would be without instruction or meals. Each day I set out with the intent to serve those that serve children while ensuring what we do isn't marginalized or forgotten. We're moving the world by moving the minds of our future.
